

Providing Confidence to Patients Sent Medication

The story of how to ensure accountability for your temperature-sensitive pharmaceutical products during shipment, giving patients confidence about the status of their drugs or treatments.

When packing pharmaceutical products for shipment to patients, single-use, low-cost temperature indicator cards can be placed in the box.

An information leaflet explaining how the indicator works, and what to do if it's activated can also be included. Cards can also be customized by adding branding, and QR codes, which link to digital content to show how indicators work.

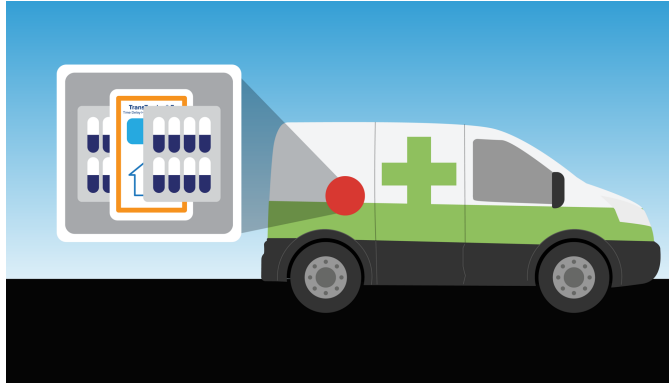

Barcode labels can also be fixed to shipment boxes. The labels support fast, accurate data capture which is essential to the tracking and tracing of items across the supply chain.

The story of how to ensure accountability for your temperature-sensitive pharmaceutical products during shipment, giving patients confidence about the status of their drugs or treatments.

Temperature sensitive indicators are always monitoring: no calibration or activation is required – your team simply packs them as close as possible to the medication.

A wide portfolio of indicators are available to support common temperature ranges, for freeze, heat, and dual heat-freeze events.

When the patient receives their items, they have an immediate visible indication that their medication has remained within the desired temperature range or if it has experienced a temperature excursion.

The assurance of an objective temperature record, adds to a range of benefits.
